

Many types of the industrial microhmmeters used for measurement of contact resistance of high-voltage circuit breakers, are supplied by special units for protection of a sensitive measuring input against high-voltage electromagnetic interferences from parallel power lines, being energized during measurement.

The simple tester for serviceability testing of this protection unit is offered.

